GALACTIC FUN PARK-BOOK TWO

“Two roaches lifted a rainbow-colored pencil etched with Galactic Fun Park on the side. They scratched a starting line in the dry ground near the Rocket Dog stand in north Moon Man. Patches of worn earth made an excellent location for the first challenges of the Grand Jeffery. “

When Galactic Fun Park decides to bulldoze the west woods for a new section, Jenkins the manager struggles to find his place in the park. But that’s the least of his worries when there is an alligator is on the loose and residents are starting to disappear.

Finger pointing and damming clues threaten to disrupt the delicate peace between the park's four sections. An investigation into the disappearances is underway, but will finding the culprit matter when Jenkins plans to retire, leaving the animals, who make Galactic Park their home, future unsettled?

GALACTIC FUN PARK-BOOK THREE

“A short stroll to the Ride Graveyard had him wandering through the dull paint choices of the Back Lot and into the front gate area where vibrant colors and mosaic art brightened up the older buildings. The quiet space near the carousel seemed to welcome him home—home to the place he’d spent half his life away from his family.”

Galactic Fun Park animals are living their most luxurious life. Eating fresh pickles straight from the jar. Test riding coasters with the friendly mechanics.

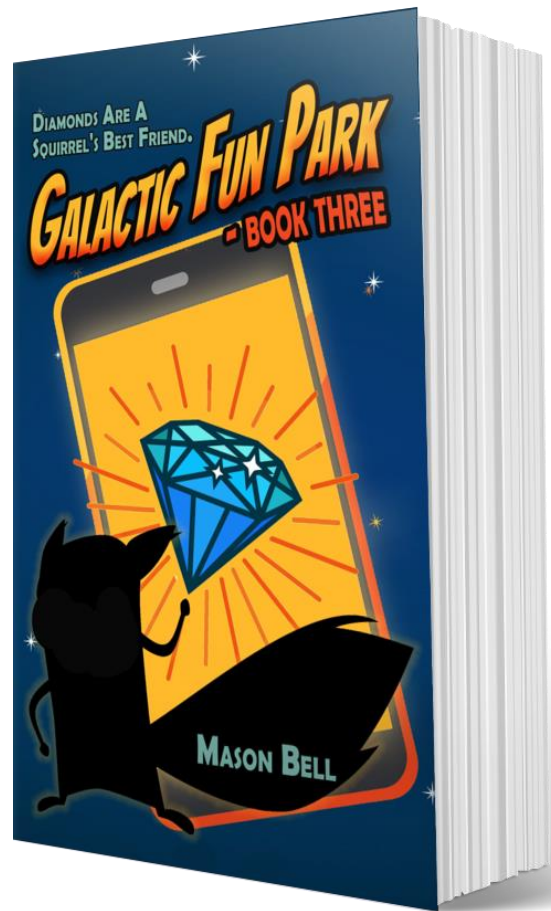

Even The Jenkins retirement fails to dampen their excitement. After all, the new manager promises morning coffee with extra almond milk!

But rotten pecans speak louder than words.

Each day sees another beloved staff member fired. Favored holiday events are canceled at the last minute.

Why is the new manager always on the phone with investors? Is the stranger digging by the stream trying to be gobbled up by an alligator?

And what is a diamond, anyway?
