In the harsh landscape of 1935 Oklahoma during the Dust Bowl and the Great Depression, Sophie Mae fights to preserve her sanity as she endures isolation and desperation.

A glimmer of hope emerges in the form of a magical traveling box. Suddenly, Sophie finds herself transported to a house where residents thrive amidst the widespread hunger and unemployment.

In this extraordinary place, talking circus elephants, invisible-to-visible transformations, and flying boys become everyday occurrences.

THE MOST MYSTIFYING POTION

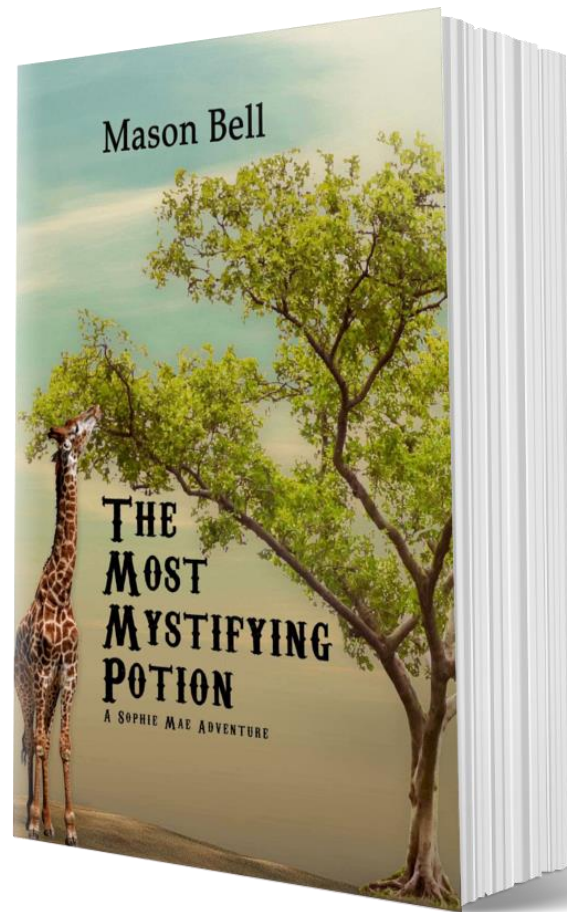

“Sophie Mae hadn’t given any thought to the others in the house fading their potion. Billy and Dink had transitioned well, but they also did it willingly. What would be the effect of allowing a potion to fade naturally over time?”

George the Great has spent six years crafting magic potions to protect Sophie Mae and the Gardenia residents during the Great Depression.

However, the potions are fading, causing concern.

When Billy returns with his Amish friend Gabe, Sophie Mae tries to convince him of the estate's magic. As the rains return to the plains, Sophie Mae faces the task of reviving her farm with a plant growth potion. Time is running out as she hurries to Drycrop before the potion loses its effectiveness.

Uncertainty looms as Sophie Mae questions her future and the unintended consequences of the potions.
